THE PROBLEM

Post-production is eating your week

You started a podcast to share ideas. Instead you spend most of your time on the work that happens after the conversation ends.

3–4 hours per episode

Editing, transcribing, writing show notes, cutting social clips, packaging for the guest. Every. Single. Episode.

The same work, repeated

Your process doesn't change episode to episode. You're doing the same manual tasks on autopilot while your best ideas sit unpublished.

Content that never ships

That blog post you were going to write from episode 98. The LinkedIn carousel from episode 104. Still in your drafts.

Editors cost $500–2,000/episode

Hiring help solves the time problem but creates a budget problem. Most independent podcasters eat the hours instead.
